Notes from the President

Gerald Grove
Son of Ronald W. Grove
335th Tail Gunner

With our having recently observed the annual "Last Plane Down" ceremony at the 95th BG Memorial adjacent to the National Museum of the USAF, Armed Forces Day, and followed closely by the Memorial Day Weekend, we're again reminded of the incredible sacrifices made by all of our Armed Forces veterans—yesterday, today, and tomorrow! Knowing that each of you reading the 95th Bomb Group Newsletter shares the passion of honoring our 95th BG(H) veterans is heart-warming and encouraging.

As we draw nearer to this year's reunion in Tucson, AZ (October 5th to 9th), I encourage you to mention this worthy event to friends and family who may not have been a part of our extended 95th BG family. The line-up of events and the rededication of our Memorial Room within the 390th Bomb Group's Memorial Museum at the Pima Air and Space Museum are outstanding. From the panel discussion featuring a wealth of topics and knowledgeable resources, our evening Fireside Chats, the joint Banquet Dinner with our sister group the 390th BG Memorial Museum Foundation, the incredibly touching Memorial Service, our Memorial Room re-opening ceremony being celebrated with our 390th friends, the keynote speaker (Professor Donald L. Miller, author of Masters of the Air), and any other 95th BG Memorials Foundation reunion activity in which you choose to participate, I can assure you this will be a reunion you'll not want to miss! Please consider making your hotel reservations soon, as well as completing and submitting your Reunion registration. This will assist our Reunion committee in making certain we can plan appropriately for everyone. We'll also have continuing Reunion updates on our website and Facebook page.

Justice - Honor - Victory

Masters of the Air Author to Give Keynote Address at Tucson

The 95th Bomb Group Memorials Foundation takes great pleasure in announcing historian Donald L. Miller, PhD, as the keynote speaker at the October 8, 2016, rededication of the 95th's Memorial Room at the 390th Memorial Museum. Dr. Miller will address a joint 95th and 390th reunion audience at the 390th's museum, located at the Pima Air & Space Museum in Tucson, AZ.

A New York Times bestselling author, Donald Miller is widely known for his works on World War II, especially Masters of the Air: America's Bomber Boys Who Fought the Air War Against Nazi Germany (New York: Simon and Schuster, 2007). In Masters of the Air, Miller draws from interviews, oral histories, and other archives to tell the definitive account of the young men of the U.S. Army Air Force and their aerial campaign against Hitler's Fortress Europe from bases in England. Miller carefully reconstructs life in wartime England as well as in the German prison camps where tens of thousands of Air Corps POWs spent part of the war. HBO is currently developing a miniseries based upon Masters of the Air, produced by Steven Spielberg and Tom Hanks.

Dr. Miller is the John Henry MacCracken Professor of History at Lafayette College in Pennsylvania. He ranks as one of the most respected authorities on World War II and U.S. history. He is the recipient of numerous awards and has given many keynote presentations. In addition, he is a frequent consultant and adviser to historical productions for such respected organizations as PBS and HBO.

Both the 95th Bomb Group Memorials Foundation and the 390th Memorial Museum Foundation eagerly look forward to Dr. Miller's keynote address in October!

Where is Bill Black Today?

by Bill Livingtone

The tall, husky sergeant with curly blond hair approached me in my Quonset hut and asked, "You Sgt. Livingstone?"

I looked up from my Stars and Stripes newspaper and said, "Yeah, that's me."

"I got some orders for you, here." He handed me a paper still smelling of mimeograph ink.

I took the paper and asked, "What's this?"

"Orders," he said. "You an' me gotta go to Bath for some kinda new gun sight school for a week."

"Bath?"

"Yeah - there's an RAF base there and that's where we gotta go."

"Well, that'll be better than sitting around here doing nothing. And you're going too? Who are you?"

"Bill Black. Been with the 95th for over a year and I'm a gunnery instructor just like you."

That was the beginning of a one-week friendship that cost me forty dollars. I had been at the 95th Bomb Group near Horham, England for about a month, waiting for orders to start a gunnery instruction school. The orders Sgt. Black handed me said we had to leave the next day.

"Oh brother, I have no idea how to get to Bath. That's a long way from here, isn't it?"

"Almost 200 miles, but I know my way around - that's why the Major wants you to go with me. We'll spend a night in London on the way. I've never been on an RAF base, but it couldn't be too bad. I'll arrange for a driver to pick us up after lunch tomorrow and he'll take us to the [Diss] train station, then we'll take a train to London."

Well, that didn't sound too bad - a chance to see London and even spend a night there. Sgt. Black seemed to know what he was talking about, and the orders in my hand were genuine enough.

Sure enough, the next afternoon he and a driver picked me up at my Quonset hut and we trundled off to the little town of Horham, about 30 miles south of Norwich. There we boarded the London-bound train for a smooth ride of about three hours. We arrived at Paddington Station, walked out to the busy street, and Black hailed a cab. The cab ride itself was a treat. What quaint vehicles they were.

Bill told the cab driver to take us to Princes Square where there was a cheap hotel he knew about. After we arrived and paid the cab driver we walked up the steps and into the small lobby. There

Black greeted the owner like an old friend and she showed us a room on the second floor. The room had one small window and one double bed. It looked like we'd be sleeping in the same bed that night. Well, there was a war on, so I guessed I shouldn't complain.

We dropped our bags on the floor and Black said, "OK, let's get goin'." Back on the street he said, "Couple a blocks from here there's a bus line that'll take us to Piccadilly."

"Piccadilly Circus?" I asked.

"Yeah, there's a pub there I always go to where we can get dinner and a few beers." I didn't drink beer at that point in my young life, but dinner sounded good.

We walked a couple of blocks, turned left a couple more, and came to a bus stop. We waited not more than five minutes when a big double-decker bus came along and we hopped on. The ride took only about ten minutes before we got off at the Piccadilly Circus, London's famous square in the heart of London. By then, the sun was down and the wartime London blackout had settled in. We walked into the very large pub; I think it was called "The Queen's Head." There must have been a hundred people sitting at tables eating, drinking, laughing, and talking.

Bill Black immediately spotted some friends and we joined them. I ordered a sandwich and listened as Bill chatted with his friends. They all laughed and talked, but to me they were perfect strangers.

After an hour I decided to take a walk and see some of the city. I told Bill I was leaving and would make my own way back to our room on Princes Square.

He said, "OK, I'll see you there later."

But before I left, he said, "Hey Bill, would you loan me ten pounds 'til payday?"

Payday was only a week away, so I said, OK, and gave him a 10-pound note. Back then, in 1944, a pound was worth four dollars, compared to only about a buck sixty today.

After I gave him the tenner, I walked out onto the relative quiet of the square, which, although blacked out, had a surprising number of people and shoppers. On one corner I heard a man shouting "Torch, torch, 'aff a quid." When I walked past him, I realized he was selling flashlights. War brings out the entrepreneurial spirit in people.

I wandered around for a while and looked at the old buildings of the great city; but because of the blackout, didn't see much, so I headed back to our room at Princes Square. I was a bit apprehensive at first, but found my way back OK. I went into our room, stripped down to my underwear, climbed into bed, and was soon asleep. About one in the morning Bill Black came in, stripped to his underwear, and climbed into bed too.

The next morning we slept in until about eight, got up, dressed, and headed for a small café where we had breakfast. Our train to Bath wouldn't leave the Liverpool Station until noon, so we wandered around town for a while. I remember standing at the base of the Parliament Bridge for the first time and marveled at the huge eleventh century Gothic Parliament building and Big Ben clock tower beside the Thames.

After our brief look at downtown London, Bill Black and I got ourselves over to the crowded old Liverpool Station (opened in 1836). I found the huge building fascinating – its high ceiling of steel girders and glass was nothing like the old Los Angeles Union Station (which opened 103 years later). At the Liverpool Station the trains came right into the enormous edifice – a great idea considering England's perennial drizzle.

The RAF base we were headed for, locally called Charmy Down, was located just north of the ancient city of Bath, and about a hundred miles southeast of London. During our week of gun site classes there I got a good look at how the Brit military lived. We slept in a barrack with other RAF enlisted men. Would you believe those guys wore detachable collars? There was no way of knowing that unless you saw them undress for bed. And yes, they also wore cotton drawers, just like us GIs.

The most fascinating thing about Charmy Down, as far as I'm concerned, was that we ate four meals a day. The last one, they called "tea," was a light meal at about nine in the evening. We took advantage of them all.

We spent a lot of time in classrooms so we didn't get into the ancient city of Bath. But that was OK – the rainy weather that fall of 1944 would have dampened a visit to Bath anyway (no pun intended).

Finished with our classes, Sgt. Black and I took a train back to our base, the 95th Bomb Group, in Horham. I loved those English trains – such smooth riding. American trains always started with a jerk – English trains started smoothly.

Back at the base, the last week of October, I still had nothing to do – I just waited for payday to collect my ten pounds from Bill Black who barracked somewhere else on the base. We were supposed to get paid on November 2nd, 1944, and wouldn't you know it, that's the day I took an ill-fated one-way flight to Germany, and Black still had my ten pounds.

When the war finally ended, and I returned home to Los Angeles, I decided to see if I could contact Bill Black to get my ten pounds back. I knew he lived in Los Angeles before the war, so I looked in the phone book and found not one or two William Blacks but about forty, so I gave up.

Somewhere out there is a guy named Bill Black who owes me ten pounds, worth $40 in 1944, but now, in 2014, worth only about $17. But I learned my lesson. If I get drafted into World War Three, I'm not loaning any money to anyone named Bill Black.

Membership: A Privilege and a Responsibility

The 95th Bomb Group Memorials Foundation and the many generous donors who made possible the renovation of the 95th Memorial Room at the 390th Memorial Museum within the Pima Air and Space Museum have presented us a unique opportunity to advance the 95th legacy. It is up to us to embrace the mission of the 95th through long-term and active membership. At this juncture in time the mantle of care for the memories and heroics of our beloved veterans is increasingly shifting from them to their children and the children of their children—that is us!

Membership is the financial engine that assists us in our mission of educating future generations of Americans about the heroic feats of the men of the 95th. It is membership that supports the maintenance and growth of the 95th website, research into the history of the 95th, printing and mailing of the newsletter, updating and maintenance of our membership database, maintenance and refurbishment of our various memorial plaques and locations, and planning for our annual reunions. Membership is also a tangible statement of your commitment to the mission of the 95th.

Please consider membership for yourself and your family members. It is our way of honoring the legacy passed on to us by our veterans, their wives, and their widows.

Membership is the financial engine that assists us in our mission of educating future generations of Americans about the heroic feats of the men of the 95th.

Reach out and join now if you are not a member. If you are already a member, consider giving a gift of membership to a family member or descendant of a veteran. Let us all join together, as one, to carry the 95th Bomb Group Memorials Foundation and its historic legacy deep into the 21st century.

Official Notice to the Membership

At the Annual Meeting of the 95th Bomb Group Memorials Foundation to be held in Tucson, Arizona, on or about 7 October 2016, a vote of the membership will be taken to amend and change the Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws to permit the Board of Directors to increase their number, when deemed necessary, of up to sixteen (16) Directors.

The current limit of the number of Directors is twelve (12). Frequently there are many fewer active Directors due to circumstances. This limits the ability of the Board to perform its work for the Foundation. If the Board deems it prudent, the number of Directors could be increased up to sixteen (16) if the following changes are made:

Articles of Incorporation, Article XII, Section I, change “The Foundation may have as many as twelve directors...” to “The Foundation may have as many as sixteen directors...”

By-Laws, Article III DIRECTORS, Section 2A NUMBER: change “... nor more than 12 members...” to “...nor more than 16 members...”

This notice complies with the Articles of Incorporation: Article XI, “These Articles may be amended by a two-thirds vote of the membership present at any meeting provided prior notification has been made to the membership...”

95th Archive Available Online

The 95th Bomb Group Memorials Foundation has an online archive of historical data and documents that tell the story of the 95th Bomb Group. The mission files that are available are the result of the combined effort of many volunteers from the 95th BG Memorials Foundation. It is hoped that making these documents available will help promote the study of the 95th Bomb Group and its involvement in the air war over Europe, and at the same time provide appropriate recognition of all those who served with the 95th.
